Guide to Primary and Secondary Source Material

"Through primary sources students confront two essential facts in studying history. First, the record of historical events reflect the personal, social, political, and economic points of view of the participants. Second, students bring to the sources their own biases, created by their own personal situations and social environments in which they live. As students use these sources they see that history exists through interpretation- and tentative interpretation at that. Primary sources fascinate students because they are real and they are personal; history is humanized through them.”

"History in the Raw" National Archives and Records Administration

A. Definitions

1. Primary Source:
   A primary source is an artifact, image, or document that was made during the time period studied. Primary sources are created by people who actually saw or participated in an event. Primary source images (artist’s rendering or photography) are those that were created or photographed by a person who witnessed the event. A primary source document is a first-person account of an event or that which was created during the event.

2. Secondary Source:
   A secondary source may be a document, replica of an artifact, or image produced by a person who was not present at the event, but who studied background information on the document, artifact, or image. Secondary sources are created to be a likeness or to provide interpretative information based upon the creator or author’s interpretation.
   Note: Secondary sources sometimes have primary sources quoted within.

B. What questions should be asked to test for point-of-view of a primary source?
   - Who wrote or made it?
   - When, where, and why was it written or made? For whom was it written?
• Does this artifact, image, or document fit into the time period?

D. Extensions

- Encourage students to search for primary sources in their homes. For example, photo albums, letters, and diaries can be wonderful insight. into events, popular culture, concerns, interests of people during different time periods. Students can make copies of primary sources in their homes. These can then be used to compare and contrast groups through time including current culture.

- Give each student a piece of paper and an envelope for them to create their own primary source document for the next generation. Discuss what might be important to put in the letter to help the historians who might read it later.
